In 2021, Cully was diagnosed with 4H leukodystrophy, a rare and incurable condition that affects the brain and spinal cord by disrupting myelin production. On October 20th, he experienced respiratory failure when the disease caused his upper airway to collapse, leaving him unable to breathe on his own. A tracheostomy was performed the next day, and he was placed on a ventilator for support. Cully and his parents spent three challenging weeks in the PICU, facing this critical episode with incredible resilience and strength.
